About

Annovi Roberta

I am a graphic designer specialising in printed and online media such as publications, brochures, magazines and promotional material.

Italian but educated in Brazil, where my parents moved when I was a child, I started working with IT at a multinational company, where I developed strong interpersonal skills and the ability to deal with a multicultural environment. An internationally recognized photographer met there gave me the opportunity to learn and work with design, developing a critical perception of the technical quality and visual content of photographs.

After years of working experience specializing in printed media, the work for an environmental NGO gave me more than just proficiency in the communication unit, where I contributed to all design aspects. Most importantly, it introduced me to the satisfaction of social and educational work.

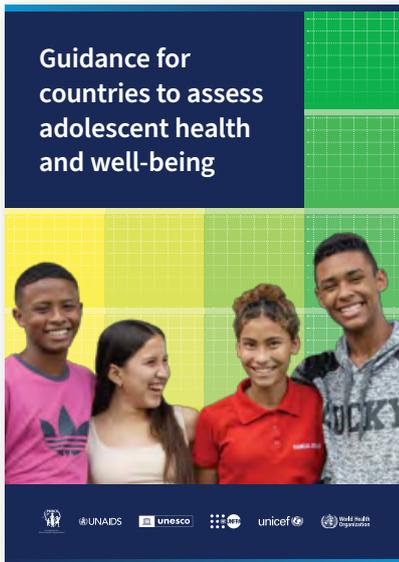

Back in Italy, my working experience in printing houses improved my knowledge of the different kinds of printing processes and machines.

Since 2009, I've had the opportunity to work with the World Health Organization (WHO) and several of its affiliates, where every job is an opportunity to improve lives. It's been a pleasure to be part of these ever-evolving teams, where availability and teamwork are essential. Although working under pressure is commonplace, the satisfaction of the humanitarian work is always rewarding.

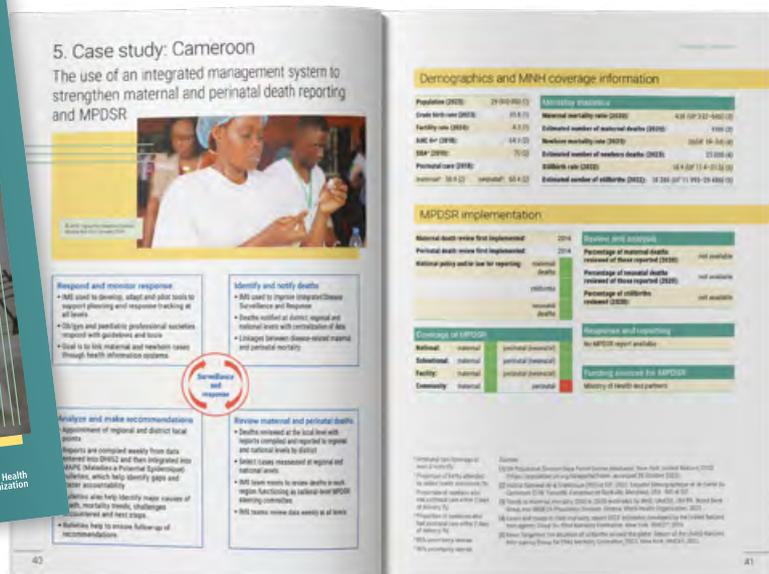

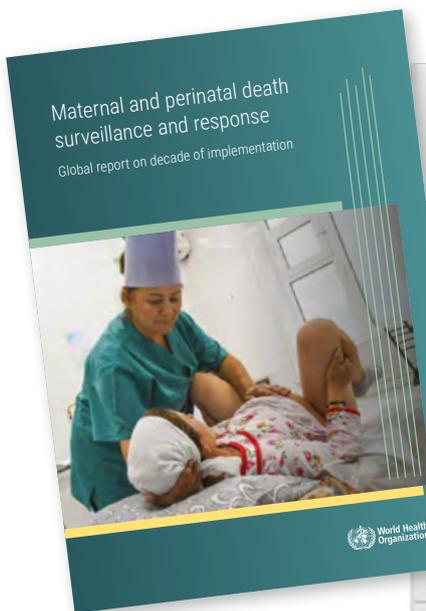

Moving to Switzerland to open my own company was a natural consequence of these experiences.

Why sexual and reproductive health and rights are essential for universal health coverage

Background

The world is committed to achieving universal health coverage (UHC) by 2035 as an integral part of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). UHC means that all individuals and communities have access to the health services they need to lead healthy and productive lives. UHC is a goal that is essential for achieving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and for ensuring that no one is left behind.

Maternal and newborn health key advocacy messages

The purpose of these messages

These general messages are intended to be shared with decision-makers and advocates in the health sector, and immediately following the International Maternal and Newborn Health Conference (IMNCH) to increase attention to maternal and newborn health issues, including vulnerable populations, and to ensure that the health sector is responsive to the needs of all women and newborns.

Top 3 messages

- 1. We have a silent emergency at hand. Every 1 minute a woman is dying due to preventable causes. We must act now to prevent this. We must act now to prevent this. We must act now to prevent this.
- 2. We are ready for action. A new set of leadership is emerging for SRH. We are ready for action. We are ready for action. We are ready for action.
- 3. Together, we can change the future for women, newborns, and children. We are ready for action. We are ready for action. We are ready for action.

Competency-based Learning

What it means

5 principles:

- focus on outcomes
- emphasise the ability of the learner
- de-emphasise time as the primary outcome metric of training
- promote greater learner-centredness
- link health workers' competencies to the health needs of the population
